Crawling bugs and half-baked enforcement: Alberta's restaurant inspections a recipe for foodborne illness – Investigation

According to the data obtained and analyzed during this investigation, more than 250 food establishments across Edmonton went at least two years without seeing an inspector. This is the first of a three-part series examining food safety in Alberta's restaurants

The vast majority of inspected city food establishments have food safety violations while hundreds of others haven't seen an inspector in years, an investigation has found. But even top restaurants can quickly turn into health hazards with customers backing more stringent rules for the food service industry. PHOTO BY GREG SOUTHAM / Postmedia
