ASA Documentation Style

These guidelines are based on the American Sociological Association (ASA) Style Guide, 3rd edition, published in 2007. For other examples and guidelines, consult the ASA Style Guide or the ASA website at http://www.asanet.org/

MacEwan students should always check with course instructors for any specific requirements or preferences that may differ from the standard ASA guidelines presented below.

General Guidelines

- Double space all pages, including abstract, body of the paper, foot/endnotes, references and acknowledgements.
- Use 1.25” margins on all sides.
- Indent all paragraphs 5 spaces or one tab.
- Number all pages sequentially, beginning with the title page, but do not type the page number on the title page.
- Use 12 point Times New Roman font.
- Use only one space after all punctuation.

Documenting Sources in the Body of the Paper (Parenthetical Citations)

When you quote or paraphrase an idea that is not your own, you must give the source in the body of your paper.

Quotations

- All quotations require a citation that includes three elements: the last name(s) of the author(s), the year of publication, and the page number(s). If there is no pagination in your source, the page number is omitted. The following are the most common ways in which these elements can be placed into the body of your paper with both short and long quotations.

- For short quotations (50 words or fewer), use double quotation marks around the quoted words, and incorporate the quotation into the body of your paper. For example,

  According to Duncan (1959), sociological analysis of cities is “critical to achieving far-reaching social change in this century” (p. 71).

  or

  Writing is not static: “Writing is a skill that is continually refined throughout a student’s academic career” (Roberts and Ritchot 2009:64).

⇒ Note the placement of the period after a short quotation.
• Display long quotations (more than 50 words) in a block of type without quotation marks. Indent this block quotation one tab from the left margin, and type the entire quotation on the indented margin. For example,

Wallerstein (2003) made the following criticism:

The social construction of the disciplines as intellectual arenas that was made in the 19th century has outlived its usefulness and is today a major obstacle to serious intellectual work. Although the institutional framework of the disciplines remains strong, there are cracks in the structures of knowledge that make them less solid than most participants imagine. (P. 453)

☞ Note the placement of the period after a long quotation. Also note that a capital “P” is used for “page” when the page number is cited at the end of block quotation.

Paraphrases

• When you choose to rewrite an author’s idea in your own words, you must indicate your source. It is preferable to name the author and date before the paraphrase, so it will be clear to your reader that the ideas that follow are not your own. Though ASA does not require you to cite the page number in a paraphrase, it is recommended that you check with your instructors for their preferences. For example,

  According to Duncan (1959), sociological analysis of cities is critical to creating positive social change in America.

  or

  Thus, as Hoffman and Webb (1981) noted, the criminalization of suicide not only provided the early state with revenue, but it also extended judicial rights and state power (p. 376).

Special Cases of Parenthetical Citation

• When you insert changes, additions, or explanations into a quotation, use square brackets around your words.

  Hall (2008) purported that “[t]his dichotomization [of gender] is problematic because most people do not conform to the polarized definitions of gender, yet these are the definitions by which we are measured in society” (p. 2).
• Use an ellipsis (three periods with a space before and after each period)
  o to represent omitted words in a sentence:

  “Symbolic interactionism . . . makes some unique assumptions about human nature and society” (Hall 2008:44).

  o at the beginning of a quotation that begins with a capitalized word that was not at the beginning of the original sentence:

  “. . . Prime Minister Harper prorogued parliament” (Cooper 2009:F1).

  o Use an ellipsis followed by a period (four spaced periods) at the end of a quotation if the final words of the original sentence are omitted:

  “The increases in technologies of social saturation give us endless social possibilities . . . .” (Hall 2008:192), such as the ability to be in constant communication with people around the world.

• When a work has two authors, cite both authors every time you refer to their work.

  (Anderson and Smith 2009:15)

• When a work has three authors, cite all authors the first time you refer to their work. In subsequent citations, however, include only the surname of the first author followed by et al. (meaning “and others”).

  First in-text citation: (Wilson, Jones, and Anders 2009:565)
  Subsequent in-text citations: (Wilson et al. 2009:599)

• When a work has four or more authors, cite only the surname of the first author followed by et al. in your in-text citations. On the references page, list all authors’ surnames, first names, and any initials.

• Groups or organizations are often authors of sources you use. If the name of an organization is long, you may use an acronym. When using acronyms, write out the complete name the first time it is used, and present the acronym in parentheses. You may then refer to the group or organization by the acronym throughout the rest of the paper.

  Subsequent uses: According to the ASA (2007) . . .
• If works by different authors are cited in the same parentheses, list them either in alphabetical order by the authors’ surnames or in date order from oldest to most recent. Be consistent throughout the paper. Separate each citation with a semicolon.

(Burgess 1968:22; Maxwell 1971:122; Stewart 2002:68)

• An indirect or secondary source is another author’s work that is discussed in the source you are using. Only the original author and date are used in the in-text citation: however, the reference entry provides full publication details for both the original author and your source.

  In-text citation: (Merton 1957:368-369)

  Corresponding reference entry:

  ➤ In the above example, your source is Wallerstein, who cited Merton.

• Personal communications (for example, an interview, letter, telephone conversation, lecture, or email) are referred to in the text and referenced with a footnote or endnote (see the examples at the bottom of this page). Personal communications are not included in the references list. Permission to use the information from personal communications should be obtained from the individual who provided the information.

  In an interview with the author, Jones\(^1\) indicated that . . .

  ➤ In cases where it would be a breach of confidentiality to give a person’s name, give your readers relevant information to establish the speaker’s credibility.

  The lawyer\(^2\) explained that litigation is not common in this type of case.

  ➤ There are ethical issues involved when you are using personal communications (regardless of whether or not you use a person’s name), so always check with your instructor if you are considering using personal communications in your paper.

• If a source has no date, use the abbreviation n.d. in the parentheses instead of a year; n.d. is also used on the references page.

\(^1\) John Jones, interview, May 23, 2009.

\(^2\) Email message to author, June 6, 2009.
References Page Guidelines

All sources cited in your paper must appear on your references page, and all entries on the references page must refer to citations within the body of your paper.

- Number the references page(s) consecutively with the rest of your paper.
- Use the single word References, centered as the heading at the top of the page.
- Use a hanging indent by keeping the first line of each entry at the left-hand margin and indenting all following lines of the entry one tab.
- Double space the reference(s) page(s).
- Arrange entries alphabetically by author or by title if there is no author.
- Invert the name of only the first author in entries for sources written by multiple authors.
- If you have more than one source by the same author(s), replace the author(s) with three dashes and a period (---.) in the second and subsequent reference entries. If these sources were published in the same year, add an a, b, c, etc. to the publication years. Use these appended letters in your in-text citations to distinguish among sources. See the bottom of page 11 for examples.

Each reference entry has four basic elements that direct readers as closely as possible to the source you used:

Author(s). date. Title. Publication or retrieval information.

An in-text citation will include the first two elements of the corresponding reference entry and a page number.

Examples of References

Audiovisual Materials

CDs, Videos, and DVDs

Treat audiovisual materials as printed materials, but include format information (i.e. VHS, DVD, CD, etc.). You may omit the place of publication if it is not relevant. In cases where the audiovisual material has no editor, use the name of the person primarily responsible for the content (e.g. writer, performer, composer, executive producer, or director).

Electronic Sources

Internet Sources: Special Guidelines

The variety of material that is available through the Internet and the diverse ways in which it is structured requires special consideration when creating references. At minimum, a reference entry for an Internet source should provide name(s) of author(s) (whenever possible), a document title, the date of publication, date of access or retrieval, and an address (such as a URL).

Information on the Internet can be modified, redesigned, updated, or deleted on an ongoing basis. As such, it is recommended that you take the following precautions with materials that have the potential to change:

- Save or print the document, Web page, or data that you use.
- Test URLs before submitting your paper to ensure they are accurate and still link to the information you cited. To ensure accuracy, use copy and paste to insert the URL.

Use italics for titles of independently published documents (e.g. PDF reports and files, journal names, or e-books); use “quotation marks” around titles of single Web pages.

Electronic Journal Article (from a database)

Author(s). date. “Title of Article: Subtitle of Article.”

For articles that are retrieved through a subscription service, use the database name (as in the above example) rather than a URL.

Electronic Journal Article (from an online location other than a database)

Legal Materials: Special Guidelines and Examples

The ASA Style Guide provides only American examples of legal materials. However, MacEwan students can find more information about citing legal materials in the Canadian Guide to Uniform Legal Citations located in the Library. The following examples integrate guidelines for both ASA documentation style and Canadian legal citations.
Constitutions

In-Text Citation: The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (1982) guarantees that all Canadians are protected against unreasonable search or seizure (s. 8).

In this example, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms is part of the larger Canadian Constitution Act, which is part of the UK’s Canada Act. Thus, the Charter is cited in the in-text citation, and its location in the Constitution Act is specified in the reference entry.

Laws

In-Text Citation: The Canada Wildlife Act (RSC 1985) states, “A person who commits or continues an offence on more than one day is liable to be convicted for a separate offence for each day on which the offence is committed or continued” (c. W-9, s. 13-3).

In this example, the Canada Wildlife Act is located in section 13-3 (s. 13-3) of chapter W-9 (c. W-9) in the Revised Statutes of Canada (RSC).

Court Decisions

In-Text Citation: The judge’s decision in the Arsenault-Cameron v. Prince Edward Island (2000) case resulted in a precedent that would affect cases for many years (para. 26).

References to court decisions include as much of the following information as is possible:

<table>

<th>pinpoint,</th>
<th>parallel citation</th>

Words for Introducing Quotations in ASA Format

The word said has many alternatives that indicate the context of a quotation or paraphrase, the attitude of the source, and your own point of view. These words, however, cannot be used interchangeably. Consult a dictionary to ensure you have used the appropriate word.

Please note that the words listed are in simple past tense.
