Find the fake: Bank of Canada, Edmonton Police Service to show police and investigation students how to spot counterfeit currency

Edmonton--Students in the Police and Investigations program at MacEwan University will receive a first-hand demonstration on how to spot counterfeit currency. Ted Mieszksalski, senior regional representative (Currency) with the Bank of Canada, and Bill Allen, a detective with the Edmonton Police Service, will provide the demonstration for the students.

The one-day workshop entitled the Counterfeit Education Module for Police Studies (CEMPS), is a collaboration with the Bank of Canada, the EPS and MacEwan University which first launched in 2005. For a number of years, CEMPS was called “the MacEwan Model” and now the workshop is taught at a variety of post-secondary institutions including, Mount Royal University in Calgary, Lethbridge College, and Assiniboine College in Brandon.

When: Thursday, October 15
Where: Robbins Health Learning Centre (109 street and 104 avenue – Room 9-322)
Time: 1:00 PM

This workshop is delivered in the second year of the Police and Investigations diploma. The diploma leads to careers in more than just police services. Graduates also find opportunities as peace officers, sheriffs, loss prevention, government security, and corporate security.
