Post-secondary students look for creative ways to find summer employment

Edmonton – It may only be February but this is the time post-secondary student’s start looking for summer job opportunities. MacEwan University will be hosting a Summer Job Fair that connects students who are looking for a meaningful summer job experience with organizations that offer paid and volunteer opportunities.

“It’s a challenging time right now for students looking for summer employment,” said Sandra Crawford, Career Services, MacEwan University.

“While attending the Summer Job Fair, students will be able to connect with hiring managers and human resource professionals, broaden your career scope and learn about opportunities that you did not know existed,” added Crawford.

Education and work experience is an effective combination to make competitive after graduation, and provides practical experience in a variety of industries. More than 25 organizations have registered to participate, including, Catholic Social Services; Canadian Cancer Society; Edmonton Humane Society and, Special Olympics Alberta.

“For students, MacEwan University’s Summer Job Fair facilitates relevant experiences and opportunities to develop a territory for networking, and allows for exploration of various industries,” added Crawford.
