MacEwan University announces new Dean

Edmonton—MacEwan University is pleased to announce that Debbie McGugan has been appointed Dean of the Library. McGugan has been with MacEwan University since 1997, and has served in a variety of roles including chair, Library Services, associate director of Learning and Instructional Services, acting chief librarian and associate dean of Libraries.

The role of the Dean of the Library is to represent and advocate for the Library within the university administrative structure and externally. With an annual budget of almost $8 million, the dean is responsible for delivering high quality library services and collections that meet the teaching, learning, and research needs of students, faculty and staff.

McGugan received her Master of Library Service from the University of Alberta, and has a Bachelor of Arts degree from Western University. Prior to joining MacEwan University she was the head of the Education Library at the University of Saskatchewan, and the reference/collections librarian at the University of Lethbridge.

McGugan will begin her three-year appointment on July 1, 2015.
